

Sarah Rindlaub

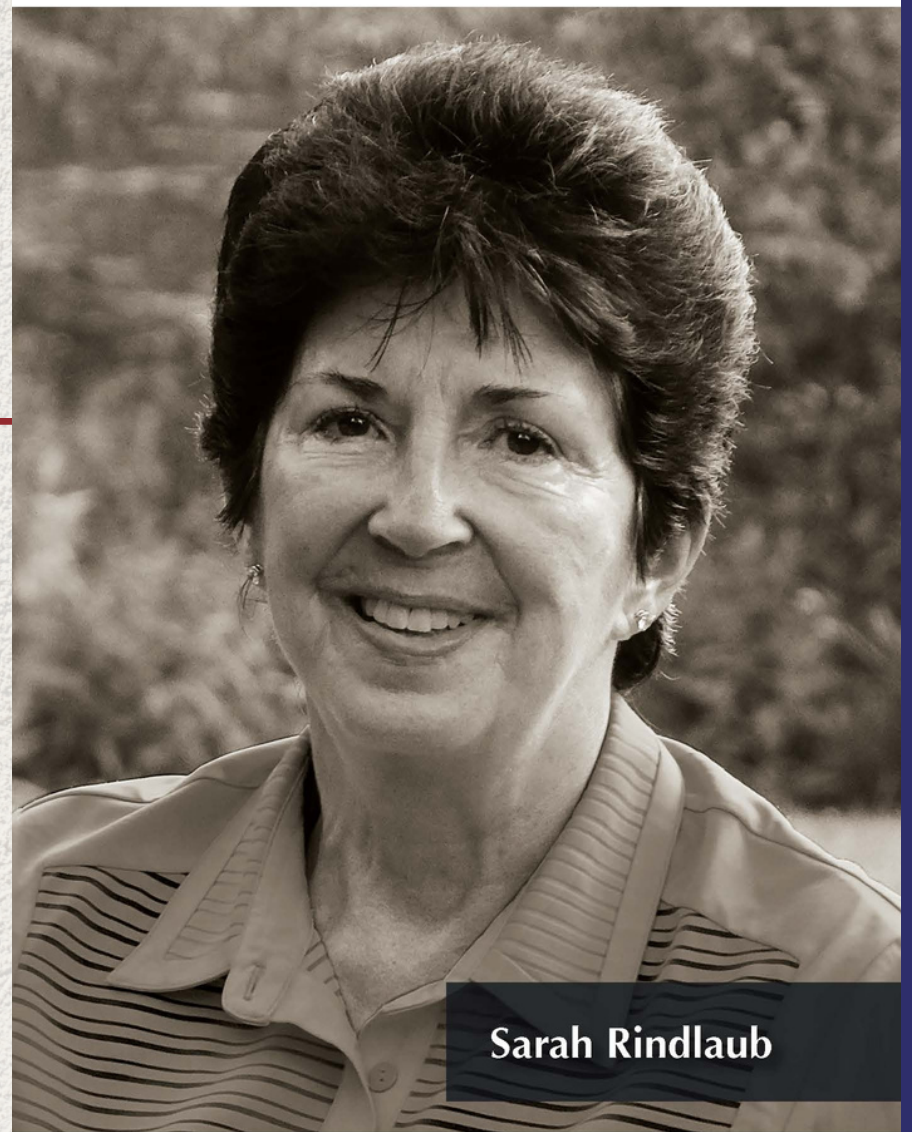

Sarah Rindlaub co-founded Women of Washington, which is an educational organization focusing on local, national and global issues. She is a longtime (and current) board member, as well as past chair of Washington Policy Center -- a free-market think tank analyzing key issues across the state. She was instrumental in helping implement and help fund WPC's annual Jennifer Dunn Scholarship that is awarded each year to female college students.

Rindlaub was a witness and amplifier of Hong Kong's struggle for freedom during the 2000s. She spoke out loudly for the democratic rights of the citizens of Hong Kong.

During her career, Rindlaub supported military personnel. She became a flight attendant on Military Air Command flights to bases in Vietnam and throughout the Pacific.

Her interest in public policy and think tanks started when she worked at the Hoover Institution at Stanford after college.

Rindlaub currently sits on the board of directors of the Clare Boothe Luce Center for Conservative Women and Washington Policy Center. She has been a passionate advocate, mentor and guide for conservative women.
