

Skip Rowley

Skip Rowley is a real estate developer and chairman of the board of Rowley Properties Inc., the family-owned business that built much of Issaquah. He is a native to the Bellevue/Sammamish area.

Rowley is active in civic, philanthropic and political ventures, and is one of our state's best-known business leaders. He supports education, the arts, conservation and community development.

Rowley is also active in state and local politics. He advocates for more and better roads, and is a critic of light rail.

Rowley's life's work has contributed greatly to the growth and economic success of Issaquah, as well as to the protection of greenspaces around the community, such as Tibbets Creek Greenway.
